Atlanta City Council President Ceasar Mitchell echoes support of today's APS BeltLine agreement

ATLANTA – City Council President Ceasar Mitchell is pleased that the City of Atlanta and the Atlanta Public Schools System have reached an amicable solution to their dispute over monies owed related to the BeltLine TAD.

"Today's announcement is an example of the possibilities when stakeholders come together to find real solutions to tough problems. While the process was tenuous at times, I am pleased that we are making progress on this very important issue" said City Council President Ceasar Mitchell.

"I want to thank Mayor Reed, APS' and the BeltLine, Inc.'s leadership for operating in a spirit of collaboration. I hope this same level of cooperation leads to action at Monday's Council meeting, which enables the City to realize the original vision of the Beltline: a source to unify, transform and improve the quality of life for all Atlantans.

Finalizing a resolution will offer proof to the fact that when we say we put children –and the future of Atlanta – first, we mean it."
